1 § 807. The law of natural flow

2 In conducting mining operations, water, as was said by Lord Tenterden, is a sort of common 3 enemy, against which each man must defend himself. Yet while this property right of defense 4 is a natural one, it must be so exercised as not to endanger the lives or property of others.

5 Each mine owner has all the rights of property in his mine, and, among them, the right to ex-6 tract all minerals therefrom, provided he works with skill and in the usual manner; and if, 7 while the occupier of a higher level exercises that right, nature causes water to flow to a lower 8 mine, he is not responsible for this operation of nature.

9 Land on a lower level owes a natural servitude to that on a higher, in respect of receiving, 10 without claim to compensation, the water naturally flowing down upon it.

11 From the necessity of the case, every owner of a mine must submit to the inconvenience of 12 having water of an adjoining mine upon a higher level descend upon his land so long as it de-13 scends in the natural course of drainage.

14 If the owner of the servient heritage wishes to guard against this operation, he must leave 15 barriers “to bay back the water of his higher neighbor.”

16 Otherwise the resulting damage, if any, is damnum absque injuria.

17 In July of 1983, before Iron Mountain Mine was placed on the NPL, the U.S. Dept. of the 18 Interior Bureau of Reclamation completed its SPRING CREEK HEAVY METAL 19 POLLUTION STUDY. See: http://www.ironmountainmine.com/iron mountain/doi study.pdf
20 “Optimum protection of Chinook salmon would be achieved by alternative 4b, increasing the 21 size of the Spring Creek Debris Dam to 25,000 acre-feet (an increase of 19,200 acre-feet)”.

22 STATUTORY REMEDY REQUIRED & RELIEF DEMANDED

23 As this remedy is still needed for Iron Mountain Mine to meet provisions of the CWA (Clean 24 Water Act), we respectfully request this Court to direct to the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation an 25 Order to Show Cause why they should not be compelled to complete this dam improvement.

15 PABTDBS 23 7. GRAY V. BARRYMORE 4 Sawyer U. 8. 638

16 The Chief Justice: The doctrine of equity, when some of the parties are out of the jurisdiction of the 17 court, is well stated by Mr. Justice Story in his Equity Pleadings, sees. 81, 82 and 83. After com-18 menting upon the general rule that all persons legally or beneficially interested in the subject-matter 19 of a suit in equity should be made parties, and stating an exception with reference to persons with-20 out the jurisdiction, who cannot consequently be reached by the process of the court, the learned 21 justice says: "It is an important qualification engrafted on this particular exception that persons who 22 are out of the jurisdiction, and are ordinarily proper and necessary parties, can be dispensed with 23 only when their interests will not be prejudiced by the decree, and when they are not indispensable 24 to the just ascertainment of the merits of the case before the court. The doctrine ordinarily laid 25 down on this point is that when the persons who are out of the jurisdiction are merely passive ob-26 jects of the judgment of the court, or their rights are merely incidental to those of the parties before 27 the court, then, inasmuch as a complete decree may be obtained without them, they may be dis-28 pensed with. But if such absent persons are to be active in the performance or execution of the de-writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 cree, or if they have rights wholly distinct from those of the other parties, or if the decree ought to 2 be pursued against them, then the court cannot properly proceed to a determination of the whole 3 cause without their being made parties. And under such circumstances, their being out of the juris-4 diction constitutes no ground for proceeding to any decree against them or their rights or interests ; 5 but the suit, so far at least as their rights and interests are concerned, should be stayed ; for to this 6 24 GRAY V. BARRYMORE extent it is unavoidably defective. In many instances the objection 7 will be fatal to the whole suit."

8 The case of a bill brought by one partner against several other copartners, one of whom was out of 9 the jurisdiction, praying for an account and dissolution of the copartnership, is given by Story in 10 illustration of this last position, that the objection will sometimes be fatal to the whole suit, for "the 11 absent partner," says the justice, "would have a distinct and independent interest, and would seem to 12 be an indispensable party, since the decree must affect that interest, and indeed, would pervade the 13 entire operations of the partnership." The case of Browne v. Blount, 2 Euss. & Mylne 83, is also 14 referred to as illustrating the same position. In that case a judgment creditor of one Blount had sued 15 out a writ of elegit upon his judgment, and had filed his bill to reach certain real estate which was 16 vested in trustees upon certain trusts, under which Blount was entitled to the rents and profits dur-17 ing his life. The trustees and certain parties interested under the trusts, and others having a charge 18 upon the trust estates, were made parties, but Blount was abroad, and had been for years previous to 19 the institution of the suit, and was not, therefore, made a party. The court held that "Blount being 20 the person whose interests were sought to be affected by the decree, the suit could not proceed in 21 his absence." See in further illustration of the doctrine stated : Midford's Chan. PL 31, 32; Inquisition 22 v. French, 1 Ambler 33; Fell v. Brown, 2 Brown's Chan. Cas. 276; Beaumont V. Meredith, 3 Ves.
23 & Beams 180; Evans v. Stokes, 1 Keen 32; Eussell v. Clark's Executors, 7 Cranch 98; Mallow V.
24 Hinde, 12 Wheat. 194; Fuller v. Benjamin, 23 Me. 255; Sparr v. Scoville, 3 Cush. 578. In Evans v.
25 Stokes the bill was filed to have the affairs of a joint-stock company, which was a co-partnership, 26 wound up and settled under the decree of the court, and accounts of the partnership taken, and a sale 27 of some PARTIES 25 portion of the property made by the directors set aside, and it was held that 28

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 all the members of the company, however numerous, must be made parties. "It is perfectly obvi-2 ous," said the master of the rolls, "that a suit, where all the accounts of the partnership are to be 3 taken, and the rights of all the parties are to be determined, as between themselves, and under the 4 various circumstances in which they stand in relation to each other, some of them, for instance, hav-5 ing paid their calls, and others having omitted to do so, cannot be prosecuted in the absence of any 6 of those parties." The case of Fuller v. Benjamin is equally pointed.

7 In that case four persons had been co-partners, two of whom had become insolvent, and were out of 8 the state; the suit was brought by one of the partners against the solvent member. On demurrer for 9 want of parties the court said: "In cases of partnership it must be difficult, if not impracticable, to 10 proceed in equity without the presence of all the co-partners or their legal representatives. Each 11 must be expected to have claims, either for services rendered or advances made, without the ad-12 justment of which it will be impossible to ascertain what may be due from or to the joint concern by 13 each; or what just claim any one or more of them may have against any one or more of the others.

14 Until such an ascertainment shall have been made it will be impossible to pass a decree, which shall 15 be founded upon the principles of justice, as to their several rights." And again: "The plaintiff in this 16 case would seem to be without remedy, either at law or in equity. In Story on Equity Pleadings, sec-17 tions 82, 83, 152 and 218, it is clearly shown that a court of equity cannot take cognizance of a case 18 in the predicament of the one here exhibited. Although the partners not present are insolvent, yet are 19 they indispensable parties whose rights might be affected by a decree, and who must be present to 20 be able to afford information as to their own claims in connection with 26 VOSE V. BRONSON 21 those of the others, and if bankrupts, their assignees should be made parties. "' The condition of the 22 alleged co-partners. Gray and Eaton, might have been similar to that of the plaintiff in this last 23 case— without relief either at law or in equity — had there not been a provision in the legislation of 24 the state for securing service by publication upon the nonresident infant. As they did not pursue the 25 course pointed out by the statute, their present position with reference to the subsequent proceed-26 ings, and the decree rendered, is precisely what it would have been if no such statute had existed.
27 The principle upon which the several cases cited proceed is fundamental, and underlies the admini-
28 stration of justice in all courts of equity. (Note: Other parts of above opinion are omitted.)

25 1. WHAT IS TRUST RESPONSIBILITY?

26 The doctrine of the trust responsibility had its beginning in the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in 27 Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 30 U.S. 1 (1831). In that case the Chief Justice called Indian tribes 28 "domestic dependent nations" and suggested that "their relation to the United States resembles that writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 of a ward to his guardian." 30 U.S. at 16-17. It is from this metaphor and general principle that the 2 doctrine of federal trust responsibility to Indian tribes developed.

3 The Supreme Court, in defining the trust responsibility, has held that:

4 [The federal government] has charged itself with moral obligations of the highest responsibility and 5 trust. Its conduct, as disclosed in the acts of those who represent it in dealing with the Indians, 6 should therefore be judged by the most exacting fiduciary standards.

7 Seminole Nation v. United States, 316 U.S. 286, 296-97 (1941).

8 The same trust principles that govern private fiduciaries also define the scope of the federal gov-9 ernment's obligations to the Tribe. Covelo Indian Community v. F.E.R.C., 895 F.2d 581, 586 (9th 10 cir. 1990). These include: 1) preserving and protecting the trust property; 2) informing the benefi-11 ciary about the condition of the trust resource; and 3) acting fairly, justly and honestly in the utmost 12 good faith and with sound judgment and prudence. See Assiniboine and Sioux Tribes v. Board of 13 Oil and Gas Conservation, 792 F.2d 782, 794 (9th Cir. 1986); Trust, 89 C.J.S. §§ 246-62. Addition-14 ally, a long line of cases imposes a trust duty of protection on agencies when their off-reservation 15 actions threaten the use and enjoyment of Indian land. See, e.g., Northern Cheyenne Tribe v. Hodel, 16 851 F.2d 1152 (9th Cir. 1988) (Department of the Interior violated the tribe's interests in coal leases 17 on eight tracts of public lands surrounding the reservation).

18 The American Indian Policy Review Commission has suggested that, although the initial enuncia-19 tion of the doctrine described the relationship as one of guardian and ward, that terminology should 20 be replaced by language from the law of trusts. American Indian Policy Review Commission at 21 127. The whole basis of a guardian and ward relationship is the presumption that the ward is in-22 competent to manage his or her own affairs and, in fact, can have no say in those affairs. A trustee-23 ship does not similarly assume incompetence on the part of the beneficiary. Further, the beneficiary 24 of the trust does not necessarily have no say in the decisions made by the trustee. Perhaps during 25 the apogee of the "plenary power" theory of Indian relations, see, e.g., Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 26 U.S. 553 (1903), the relationship between many tribes and the United States government ap-27 proached one of ward to guardian. But such a condescending characterization should not be pepe-28 trated.

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 That a general trust relationship exists between the United States and Indians does not mean, how-2 ever, that such a duty is regularly and generally enforced by courts. True, courts commonly reiterate 3 that the trust imposes on the United States an "overriding duty . . . to deal fairly with Indians wher-4 ever located." Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. 199, 236 (1973). But the history of this country teaches that 5 fairness has rarely characterized the United States-Indian relationship nor has some general concept 6 of fairness been enforced by the courts. Nevertheless, both the courts and Congress generally accept 7 the notion that there exists a special relationship between American Indians and the federal gov-8 ernment, a relationship often likened to a trust. See, e.g., United States v. Mitchell, 436 U.S. 206, 9 225 (1983); 25 U.S.C. § 1601(a) (Indian Health Care Improvement Act).

10 As the Supreme Court has stated:

11 "Many forms of conduct permissible in a workaday world for those acting at arm's length are for-12 bidden to those bound by fiduciary ties. A trustee is held to something stricter than the morals of the 13 market place. Not honesty alone, but the punctilio of an honor the most sensitive, is then the stan-14 dard of behavior. As to this there has developed a tradition that is unbending and inveterate. Un-15 compromising rigidity has been the attitude of courts of equity when petitioned to undermine the 16 rule of undivided loyalty by the 'disintegrating erosion' of particular exceptions. . . . Only thus has 17 the level of conduct for fiduciaries been kept at a level higher than that trodden by the crowd.
18 Seminole Nation v. United States, 316 U.S. 286, 297 fn. 12 (1942).] [Quoting from Chief Judge
19 (later Mr. Justice) Cardozo in Meinhard v. Salmon, 249 N.Y. 458, 464, 164 N.E. 545, 546, 62

21 In a simplified fashion, some central tenets (and limits) of the trust doctrine are as follows:

22 1.1 Courts generally hold that the nature of the trust responsibility and its specifics (except, perhaps, 23 when dealing with Indian property and money) are defined by Congress. See, United States v.
24 Mitchell, 445 U.S. 535 (1980) (Mitchell I). Congress could presumably subtract, limit, expand or 25 even terminate the trust altogether. Unless a Congressional action violates some other provision of 26 the constitution, such as the Fifth Amendment prohibition against taking of property without just 27 compensation, Congressional action in defining the trust is not reviewable by a court of law. See, 28

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 Menominee Tribe v. United States, 607 F.2d 1335 (Ct. Cl. 1980), cert. denied (4454 U.S. 950 2 (1980).

3 1.2 Because of Congressional control of the nature of the trust, courts have generally said that an 4 enforceable trust relationship "must be . . . based upon specific statute, treaty or agreement which 5 helps define and, in some cases, limit the relevant [trust] duties. . . ." Joint Tribal Council of Passo-6 moquaddy Tribe v. Morton, 528 F.2d 370, 379 (1st Cir. 1975). Thus, courts have generally not 7 found trust obligations to provide general financial support, social services, education and that sort 8 of thing to Indians, except when it is explicitly required by Congress. See, Gila River Pima-9 Maricopa Indian Community v. United States, 427 F.2d 1194 (Ct. Cl. 1970) cert denied 400 U.S.
10 819 (1970).

11 1.3 The trust with respect to tribal property and money is somewhat different, however. The courts 12 do generally impose a trust obligation on the federal government when it manages tribal property or 13 money. See, e.g., United States v. Mitchell, 463 U.S. 207 (1983). In addition, courts have found un-14 der the Non-Intercourse Act a federal a duty to protect Indian land from improper alienation. See, 15 Joint Tribal Council of Passomoquaddy Tribe v. Morton, supra.

16 1.4 Although courts are hesitant to enforce a generalized trust obligation outside of the property 17 context, and require instead that enforceable duties be defined by Congress, they have nevertheless 18 used the generalized existence of a trust obligation to accomplish two other important objectives.
19 First, the existence of the trust is used to support the general rule of statutory construction whereby 20 laws passed for the benefit of Indian peoples are broadly construed to protect their interests. See, 21 Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law, (Second Edition 1982) at 221-224. Second courts use the 22 existence of some generalized trust responsibility to impose obligations of procedural fairness on 23 the United States when it is making decisions affecting Indians. See, Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. 199 24 (1974).

25 1.5 Courts will enforce both federal statutes and the Constitution against the federal government. In 26 doing so, they often mention the trust and read the statutes to create "trust-like" duties. But as a le-27 gal matter, the existence of the trust is not required to protect tribal rights set out in statutes, treaties 28 or the Constitution.

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 1.6 Cases on trust duty have often discussed issues of "remedy." In some cases, a court might find 2 that a trust exists, but that it only has power to enjoin continued violations of the trust rather than to 3 grant money damages for past violations. Only the Claims Court can award money damages against 4 the United States. Cf. Duncan v. United States, 517 F. Supp. 1 (N.D. Cal. 1977). While the battle 5 over the nature of relief can get fairly complex, it is probably sufficient to note here that except in a 6 few isolated instances, money damages are available for Indian tribes for United States' violations 7 of its trust obligations with respect to management of trust property and money. See, United States 8 v. Mitchell, (Mitchell II) supra.

9 1.7 Finally, depending on Congressional statutory direction, the trust relationship between the 10 United States and Indians can run both to tribes see, e.g., Navajo Tribe of Indians v. United States, 11 624 F.2d 981 (Ct. Cl. 1980) and to individual Indians see, e.g., Cramer v. United States, 261 U.S.
12 219 (1923); Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. 199 (1973); Cf. Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, 307 U.S. 1 13 (1939) (individuals may not enforce rights belonging to tribe where the Congress dealt with tribal 14 Indians).

15 2. WHO HAS A TRUST RESPONSIBILITY?

16 Generally, the federal government and all federal agencies must exercise their respective responsi-17 bilities in the context of a trust responsibility to Indian Tribes. They may not adopt policies, prom-18 ulgate regulations, or take actions that would compromise their ability to fulfill their fiduciary re-19 sponsibilities to those Tribes.

20 The federal trust responsibility to Indian tribes applies to all federal entities. See Nance v. EPA, 645 21 F.2d 701, 711 (9th Cir. 1981) ("any federal government action is subject to the United States' fidu-22 ciary responsibility toward the Indian tribes"). In Covelo Indian Community v. FERC, 895 F.2d 581
23 (9th Cir. 1990), the court clearly ruled that all government agencies have "fiduciary" responsibilities 24 to tribes. As agencies of the federal government, they are subject to the United States' fiduciary re-25 sponsibilities towards Indian tribes. The same trust principles that govern private fiduciaries deter-26 mine the scope of Federal agency obligations. The trustee must always act in the interests of the 27 beneficiaries. Covelo, supra, at 586 (citations omitted)(specifically dealing with the Federal Energy

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 Regulatory Commission). (FERC did not abuse discretion in refusing later intervention to the 2 Covelo Community.)

3 The Ninth Circuit has underscored the importance of trust responsibility for all agencies:

4 We have noted, with great frequency, that the federal government is the trustee of the Indian tribes'
5 rights, including fishing rights. See, e.g., Joint Bd. of Control v. United States, 862 F.2d 195, 198 (9th 6 Cir. 1988). This trust responsibility extends not just to the Interior Department, but attaches to 7 the federal government as a whole.

8 Parravano v. Babbitt, 70 F.3d 539, 546 (9th Cir. 1995) (Part of the Department of Commerce's fed-9 eral trust responsibility is to protect the exercise of reserved tribal fishing rights.)

10 3. TRUST RESPONSIBILITY TO MANAGE TRIBAL FUNDS AND TRIBAL PROPERTY.

11 3.1 What Tribal Property Is Covered By The Trust Responsibility?

12 Tribal trust law is most well developed in the arena of trust property and money. The courts have 13 made it fairly clear that certain kinds of Indian property and monies are held by the United States in 14 trust. In such cases, the government must assume the obligations of a fiduciary or trustee.

15 First, the courts have imposed trust duties with respect to tribal funds. E.g., Seminole Nation v.
16 United States, 316 U.S. 286 (1942); Angle v. United States, 709 F.2d 570 (9th Cir. 1983); Chey- 17 enne-Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma v. United States, 512 F.2d 1390 (Ct. Cl. 1975). Additionally, as 18 the Indian Claims Commission noted, "the fiduciary obligations of the United States toward re-19 stricted Indian reservation land, including minerals and timber, are established by law and require 20 no proof." Blackfeet and Gros Ventre Tribes of Indians, 32 Ind. Cl. Comm. 65, 77 (1973). As a 21 general matter, the United States must properly manage and, protect such resources as: tribal land, 22 United States v. Shoshone Tribe of Indians, 304 U.S. 111 (1938); Lane v. Pueblo of Santa Rosa, 27 3.2 How Does a Trust Over Indian Property Arise?

28

1 There are two ways in which the trust relationship with respect to Indian property is seen to arise.
2 First, Congress can explicitly announce an intent to create a trust, as when certain funds are placed 3 "in trust" for a tribe or tribes. Second, when dealing with tribal property or money, there need not be 4 a specific statute or treaty creating the trust relationship. Rather, "a fiduciary relationship necessar-5 ily arises when the Government assumes . . . elaborate control over [resources] . . . and property be-6 6 longing to Indians. All of the necessary elements of the common-law trust are present: a trustee (the 7 United States), a beneficiary (the Indian allottees), and a trust corpus (Indian timber, lands, or 8 funds)." United States v. Mitchell, supra, 463 U.S. at 225, citing Navajo Tribe of Indians v. United 9 States, 624 F.2d 981, 987 (Ct. Cl. 1980). One court has suggested with respect to money, that 10 "where the United States holds funds for Indian tribes, a trust relationship exists unless there is ex-11 plicit language to the contrary." Angle v. United States, supra, citing Moose v. United States, 674 12 F.2d 1277, 1281 (9th Cir. 1982).

13 3.3 What Rules Govern A Property Or Money Trust?

14 Once a court determines that a trust relationship exists between the United States and tribes with 15 respect to tribal property and tribal funds what rules constrain the actions of the United States?

16 First, of course, an agency of the United States must comply with federal statutory law. Thus, for 17 instance, if the law requires that the BIA manage federal timber on a sustained yield basis, its fail-18 ure to do so would violate the statutory terms of the trust relationship. See, Mitchell II, supra.

19 In addition, however, the courts have held that once a property or money trust relationship is found 20 to exist between the United States and an Indian or an Indian tribe, many of the general common 21 law rules established to govern the fiduciary obligations of a trustee towards his beneficiary will 22 apply to any government action. See, Mitchell II supra. On the other hand, it cannot be said that all 23 the rules applicable to private fiduciaries are necessarily and automatically applicable to the trust 24 relationship between the United States government and tribes. See, United States v. Nevada, 463 25 U.S. 110, 127 (1983) ("while these [principles of private trust law] undoubtedly provide useful 26 analogies in cases such as these, they cannot be regarded as finally dispositive of the issues.") The 27 Claims Court, which regularly applies the general principles of trust law says this:

28

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 [Although we can apply the general principles of trust law] this does not mean, however, that all the 2 rules governing the relationship between private fiduciaries and their beneficiaries and accountings 3 between them necessarily apply in full vigor in an accounting claim by an Indian tribe against the 4 United States In each situation the precise scope of the fiduciary obligation of the United 5 States and any liability for breach of that obligation must be determined in light of the relationships 6 between the government and the particular tribe.

7 Navajo Tribe of Indians v. United States, 624 F.2d 981, 988 (Ct. Cl. 1980). We now turn to some of 8 the obligations courts have imposed on the federal government in Indian cases.

9 3.3.1. Most generally, a trustee must act in a reasonably prudent manner in managing the trust as-10 sets. With respect to tribal funds, for instance, the United States has the fundamental obligation both 11 to protect the Indian beneficiaries' principal, that is, the so-called trust corpus, as well as to maxi-12 mize the trust income from the corpus. See, Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma v. United 13 States, 512 F.2d 1390, 1392 (Ct. Cl. 1975). Thus the United States can be held liable in trust fund 14 cases for its failure wisely to invest the monies. See, Id. Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians v.
15 Barlow, 834 F.2d 1393 (8th Cir. 1987).

16 3.3.2. The United States is obligated to protect Indian trust lands from alienation. Joint Tribal 17 Council of Passomoquaddy Tribe v. Morton, supra. This is true even when the trust is a limited one.
18 Typically the primary purpose of federal trust land is to maintain it in federal and tribal hands. See, 19 United States v. Mitchell, (Mitchell I), supra, (1980); United States v. Chippewa Nations, 229 U.S.
20 498 (1912).

21 3.3.3. The United States as property trustee is generally prohibited from acting in a manner that 22 benefits it and harms its beneficiary. Thus, the United States cannot take economic advantages for 23 itself which should be flowing to its beneficiary, e.g., by leasing its own land but refusing to lease 24 adjacent tribal land. Navajo Tribe of Indians v. United States, supra, 610 F.2d 766, 768 (Ct. Cl.
25 1979). This general rule of trust law, however, is somewhat softened in its restrictions on govern-
26 mental actions because Congress can assign to the executive branch obligations which might con-27 flict. The Supreme Court has said:

28

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 It may be that where only a relationship between the government and a tribe is involved the law re-2 specting the obligations between a trustee and a beneficiary in private litigation will in many, if not 3 all, respects adequately describe the duty of the United States. But where Congress has imposed 4 upon the United States, in addition to its duty to represent Indian tribes, a duty to obtain water rights 5 for reclamation projects, and as even authorizing the inclusion of reservation lands within a project, 6 the analogy of a faithless private fiduciary cannot be controlling for purposes of evaluating the au-7 thority of the United States to represent different interests.

8 United States v. Nevada, supra, 463 U.S. at 142. The Court, unfortunately, did not go on to explain 9 how the executive branch should handle the situation when Congress has assigned it potentially 10 conflicting obligations.

11 3.3.4. With respect to natural resources, the courts do not require that the United States always seek 12 to lease or sell the resources for profit. Thus, for instance, the Claims Court has held that the gov-13 ernment is not obligated actively to seek out persons to drill reservation oil and pay royalties. Na-
14 vajo Indian Tribe v. United States, supra, 610 F.2d 766. Nor must it establish a grazing permit sys-15 tem whereby non-Indians would graze on reservation land and pay the tribe for the privilege. See, 16 White Mountain Apache Tribe v. United States, 11 Cl. Ct. 614 (1987). The Indian Claims Commis-17 sion described this rule as it generally follows:

18 Rules for the management of commercial real estate [for instance] by private trustees have little ap-19 plication [in the Indian context]. The primary purpose of establishing Indian reservations is to pro-20 vide a home for the Indians, where, it was hoped, they might eventually make their living by their 21 own efforts. Consequently the trust status of reservation land never wholly ousted the Indians from 22 its management, for which, in more recent years, they have been encouraged to assume increasing 23 responsibility. Indian reservations are not like apartment houses which a trustee is expected to keep 24 filled with paying tenants at all times. No general law requires the Government to administer Indian 25 land for profit at all.

26 Blackfeet and Gros Ventre Tribes v. United States, 32 Ind. Claims Com. 65, 77 (1973). Thus the 27 Claims Commission concluded that "the government has never been under an obligation to lease 28 out [reservation] . . . land."

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 The fiduciary obligations to account for trust activities "arises only where the Government has un-2 dertaken to permit a third party to use reservation land, to extract reservation minerals, or to cut or 3 haul away reservation timber, or when the government has done one or more of these things itself." 4 Id., 32 Ind. Cl. Com. at 78. See, also Three Affiliate Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation v.
5 United States, 36 Ind. Cl. Com. 116, 130 (1975). Thus, in White Mountain Apache Tribe v. United 6 States, supra, the court said that the United States was not required to establish a grazing permit 7 system in order to make Apache land economically productive. But once it decided to institute a 8 system, it had to run it prudently and for the Indians' financial benefit.

9 3.3.5. Management of tribal land or resources for tribal income creates, really, a dual obligation on 10 the government. It must both make money from the resources and protect the value of the trust 11 property. For instance, when managing timber, the government must "obtain revenue from the for-12 est and . . . protect the forest. To neglect or minimize that latter in performance of the former would 13 amount to a breach of fiduciary duty." White Mountain Apache Tribe of Arizona v. United States, 14 11 Cl. Ct. 614, 672 (1987). Similarly, if the government permits grazing on federal land it must in-15 sure that the grazing does not lead to erosion and diminution of the value of the land itself. Id.; see, 16 also Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community v. United States, 9 Cl. Ct. 660 (1986) (obliga-17 tion to protect ground water to permit continued agricultural uses). In the famous Mitchell case, the 18 allottees contended that the federal government failed to replant harvested areas, thus reducing the 19 long-term value of the reservations resources. See, Mitchell v. United States, 10 Cl. Ct. 63, modi-20 fied 10 Cl. Ct. 787 (1986). At the same time, the government has to make choices that are advanta-21 geous for the tribes financially and must protect their interests when negotiating or regulating non-22 Indian lessees of tribal resources. Jicarilla Apache Tribe v. Supron Energy Corp., 782 F.2d 855 23 (10th Cir. 1986) (en banc); 793 F.2d 117 (1986).

24 3.3.6. In seeking a profit for tribes, the government must act as a prudent manager using good busi-25 ness judgment, seeking to obtain full value for the resources sold or leased. Nevertheless, the mere 26 existence of a difference between what the government obtains for the Indians and what a later in-27 dependent analysis identifies as the fair market value, does not automatically show a breach of fidu-28 ciary obligation. Not all deals turn out well. The government is a trustee, not a guarantor. As long as

1 the government makes reasonable and prudent efforts the failure of some investments does not give 2 rise to a cause of action. See, United States v. Mason, 412 U.S. 391 (1973) (failure of the United 3 States to challenge the legality of inheritance tax on certain Indian property held not to be unrea-
4 sonable); Montana Bank of Circle, N.A. v. United States, 7 Cl. Ct. 601 (1985) (approval by Secre-
5 tary of the Interior, under 25 U.S.C. § 81, of certain contracts between an Indian-chartered corpora-6 tion and a bank did not make the United States liable to make up any losses which the Indians suf-7 fered as a result of the contract approved). Cf. Hydaberg Coop Association v. United States, 667 8 F.2d 64 (Ct. Cl. 1981) (government not guarantor of profits of tribal enterprise). On the other hand, 9 if a discrepancy of value and price is extreme, a court might find the difference sufficient proof of 10 gross neglect and actionable on its face. See, Coast Indian Community v. United States, 550 F.2d 11 639 (Ct. Cl. 1977) (right of way, worth at least $50,000 sold for $2500).

12 3.3.7. The government must, at a minimum, take such steps to protect the level of water necessary 13 to continue existing Indian agricultural practices. See, Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Commu-14 nity v. United States, 9 Cl. Ct. 660 (1986). However, it would appear that there is no obligation on 15 the part of the government either to develop the full potential of Indian water supplies or even to 16 protect the full extent of Indian water rights. Id. It seems also clear that the United States may not 17 act in a manner that suppresses or limits Indian use of water to which they have rights, see, White 18 Mountain Apache Tribe v. United States, supra, 8 Cl. Ct. 677 (1985), 11 Cl. Ct. 614 (1987).

19 3.4. Beneficiary Consent Does Not Defeat Trust Responsibility.

20 In standard trust law, the beneficiary may not complain about an action of the trustee to which the 21 beneficiary consents. See, e.g., Restatement of Trusts Second, § 216. Of course, in many instances, 22 tribes must by statute give their consent to natural resource actions of the BIA. See, e.g., 25 U.S.C.
23 § 324 (right-of-way approvals); 25 U.S.C. § 398 (oil and gas leases); 25 U.S.C. § 402a (lease of ag-24 ricultural land). No cases are known in which tribal council general consent to BIA action has been 25 used successfully to defend a breach of trust case. The Indian Claims Commission knew well that 26 Indians were involved in the management of their resources, but it never suggested that constituted 27 a valid defense in a tribal property breach of trust case. See, Blackfeet and Gros Ventre Tribes, su-28 pra, 32 Ind. Cl. Comm. at 77. Additionally, in some cases there appears to have been explicit con-

1 sent to actions that were held, nevertheless, to be a breach of trust. See, e.g., United States v.
2 Mitchell (Mitchell II), supra, (Supreme Court notes that Indian allottees must consent to certain for-3 est management decisions); Duncan v. Andrus, 517 F. Supp. 1 (N.D. Cal. 1977); Duncan v. United 4 States, 597 F.2d 1337 (1979) (tribe agreed to what turned out to be inadequate water supplies, yet 5 the government was found to have breached a trust in not providing water supplies).

6 A tribe may bring a breach of trust action if the government lets a tribal council, which it knows to 7 be corrupt, mismanage tribal funds. In such a context, the corrupt council could not properly pro-8 vide the tribe's consent for any action, and the government was held liable for participating in the 9 loss of tribal resources because it dealt with the incompetent or corrupt council. See, Seminole Na- 10 tion v. United States, 316 U.S. 286 (1942).

11 Although beneficiary consent does not seem to prevent tribal trust lawsuits in the natural resources 12 context, there are a number of cases involving tribal funds which are worth pondering. In that set-13 ting, it appears that actual tribal control of the funds is seen as a valid defense against a claim that 14 the federal government breached its trust in using the funds. For instance, in Navajo Tribe v. United 15 States, 34 Ind. Cl. Com. 432, 434 (1974) the Commission dealt with a contention "that the Commis-16 sion erred in ordering defendant to account for [the use of] those tribal funds which are controlled 17 and managed by plaintiff [tribe]. Plaintiff's Reply concedes this issue" Given that concession, 18 the Claims Commission ordered that the federal government was not required to account for any 19 tribal funds which had been transferred directly to the plaintiff for its use.(1)

20 A similar issue came up in another funds accounting case, American Indians Residing on Maricopa- 21 Ak Chin Reservation v. United States, 667 F.2d 980 (Ct. Cl. 1981). The court required a govern-22 ment accounting of the use of funds. But in doing so, it cited the Navajo case and said:

23 If complete control of tribal organization funds has been transferred to the tribe, the government is 24 not required to account. If the government contends that control has been transferred it has a burden 25 of showing that fact, and, where tribal leadership did not control use of the money, the government 26 must account.

27 667 F.2d at 1003.

28

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 There is a difference of course between control and consultation. In Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribes of 2 Oklahoma v. United States, 512 F.2d 1390 (Ct. Cl. 1975) the government tried to defend its failure 3 to use productively tribal funds in part by pointing to its policy of consulting with the Indians. The 4 government said the tribes failed to respond usefully or on time. The court responded to that claim 5 as follows:

6 [W]hile such consultation may have been a useful part of the defendants overall policy to make the 7 Indians ready for dissolution of trust status, the government was duty bound to make the maximum 8 productive investment unless and until specifically told not to do so by a tribe and until the defen-9 dant also made an independent judgment that the tribes request was in its own best interest.

10 512 F.2d at 1396. If this rule were adopted generally, it would appear that as long as the federal 11 government approves tribal actions, it may still be held liable as a trustee if the actions are impru-12 dent.

13 In Loudner v. United States, the court held that certain descendants could recover judgment funds.
14 In Loudner, certain lineage descendants of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe did not learn of a 15 judgment fund until more than twenty years after distribution of the fund. The government alleged 16 that the action was too late and it was barred by the statute of limitations. In disallowing this de-17 fense the court noted that the beneficiaries duty to discover claims against the trustee was lessened 18 by the beneficiaries' right to rely upon the trustee's good faith and expertise and that the govern-19 ment's efforts to call attention to the original distribution through Federal Register postings, news 20 releases and other matters was insufficient to put reasonably diligent beneficiaries on notice. Loud- 21 ner v. United States, 108 F.3d 896 (8th Cir. 1997).

22 4. WHAT IS THE NATURE OF THE TRUST RESPONSIBILITY OUTSIDE OF THE INDIAN 23 PROPERTY AND INDIAN FUNDS CONTEXT?

24 Courts have hesitated to find enforceable substance of the trust responsibility outside the context of 25 tribal property or funds. Thus, for instance, the courts have refused to find the existence of some 26 general trust responsibility of the United States to care for the general health and welfare of Indians 27 absent an explicit statute, treaty or executive order. The general rule was stated in Navajo Tribe of 28 Indians v. United States, 624 F.2d 981, 988 (Ct. Cl. 1980):

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 [W]here the federal government takes on or has control or supervision over tribal monies or proper-2 ties, the fiduciary relationship normally exists with respect to such monies or properties (unless 3 Congress has provided otherwise) On the other hand, if no tribal money or property is involved 4 and the question is, for instance, whether the United States has a general fiduciary obligation to 5 educate Indians, the existence of the special relationship for that purpose depends upon the proper 6 interpretation of the terms of some authorizing document (e.g., statute, treaty, executive order).

7 The court in Navajo relied on its own case, Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community v. United 8 States, 427 F.2d 1194, 1198 (Ct. Cl. 1980); cert. denied 400 U.S. 819 (1970), to support this view.

9 The Indian community there had charged that the United States had failed to provide adequate edu-10 cational opportunities and health care to the tribe, in violation of the trust responsibility. It said that 11 having undertaken to help the Indians, the government must do so reasonably well. The court re-12 jected such arguments. 427 F.2d at 1199. In other words, the court would not imply an enforceable 13 trust relationship simply because the United States has taken over management and control of tribal 14 education, even though it would imply a trust if the government had taken over management and 15 control of tribal property. See, also Vigil v. Andrus, 667 F.2d 931, 934 (10th Cir. 1982); Fort Sill 16 Apache Tribe v. United States, 477 F.2d 1360 (Ct. Cl. 1973).

17 Thus, the courts have held that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission need not afford a tribe 18 greater rights than they otherwise would have had under the Federal Power Act in assigning pre-19 liminary power licenses. Skokomish v. F.E.R.C., 121 F.3d 1303 (9th Cir. 1997). Neither must the 20 FAA make special arrangements for an Indian tribe if it otherwise complies with applicable law in 21 determining flight paths. Morongo Band v. FAA, 161 F.3d 569 (9th Cir. 1998).

22 Nevertheless the courts have found some trust duties outside of the money and property context.

23 First, and most clearly, courts have found that the trust duty imposes certain procedural obligations 24 on the federal government. Second, the courts have imposed some substantive trust or trust-like ob-25 ligations on the federal government related to social services for Indians.

26 4.1 Trust Responsibility And Procedural Rights.

27
28

1 Trust responsibility means that Federal agencies must consult with tribes before taking action which 2 affects their property and rights. Thus the United States must observe procedural fairness when it is 3 making decisions affecting Indians. See, Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. 199 (1974).

4 As a general matter, courts emphasize that special attention to procedural fairness is required be-5 cause of the "overriding duty of our federal government to deal fairly with Indians wherever lo-6 cated" and the "distinctive obligation of trust incumbent upon the government in its dealings with 7 these dependent and sometimes exploited people." Morton v. Ruiz, 415 U.S. at 236. Citing Semi-8 nole Nation v. United States, 316 U.S. 236 (1942).

9 In Morton v. Ruiz, the Supreme Court reviewed a decision of the BIA to deny certain general assis-10 tance (welfare) benefits to tribal members who lived off reservations. The BIA had determined to 11 limit such benefits only to those persons who lived on the reservation. The off-reservation Indians 12 argued that violated the trust responsibility.

13 The Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) argued first that Congress knew of and approved the limita-14 tions. The Court rejected that argument upon review of the legislative record.

15 The Court went on to note, however, that given a limit on available funds, the BIA obviously had to 16 make benefit choices as long as they did not violate specific statutory directives. Given the breadth 17 of the authorizing legislation (the Snyder Act, 25 U.S.C. § 13), these choices necessarily lay, in 18 large part, within the BIA's discretion.(2)

19 But the Court found that in this instance the BIA had erred by choosing its policy without promul-20 gating the decision as an administrative rule available for public review and comment. The Court 21 relied for its decision on the Administrative Procedure Act. But it also emphasized that special at-22 tention to procedural fairness was required because of the "overriding duty of our federal govern-23 ment to deal fairly with Indians wherever located" and the "distinctive obligation of trust incumbent 24 upon the government in its dealings with these dependent and sometimes exploited people." 415 25 U.S. at 236. Citing Seminole Nation v. United States, 316 U.S. 236 (1942).

26 In short, according to Morton v. Ruiz, the Snyder Act and subsequent Congressional appropriations 27 did not impose a particular substantive obligation on the government to provide a particular level of 28 assistance. (Indeed, the Court noted that if appropriated funds are not sufficient to provide fully for writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 the needs of Indians, the resulting hard choices do not necessarily violate the trust. 415 U.S. at 230-
2 231.) But the Court used the trust responsibility to impose the procedural obligation that the BIA
3 make its decisions in an open and above-board manner. Several courts following Morton have im-
4 posed similar obligations in like circumstances. See, e.g., Oglalla Sioux Tribe v. Andrus, 603 F.2d 5 707 (8th Cir. 1979) (the assignment of superintendent of Pine Ridge Agency without full consulta-6 tion with the Tribe violated the Administrative Procedure Act, BIA guidelines, and the "trust re-7 sponsibility"); Rogers v. United States, 697 F.2d 886 (9th Cir. 1983) (failure to give adequate notice 8 to distributees of judgment fund violated the trust); Fox v. Morton, 505 F.2d 254 (9th Cir. 1974) 9 (Indians entitled to due process prior to termination of Indian Health Service benefits because of 10 "overriding duty of fairness due to Indians"); Navajo Nation v. Hodel, 645 F. Supp. 825 (D. Ariz.
11 1986) (failure to follow own internal decision guidelines violates trust).

12 This requirement of procedural fairness is now surely a basic component of the trust obligation, 13 whether the issue involves Indian property or some other federal programs that affect Indians or 14 Indian tribes.

15 4.2 Court Imposition of Other Substantive Obligations Under Trust Law.

16 There are other cases that impose some substantive obligations on the federal government based on 17 the trust, or a "trust-influenced" reading of federal statutes and regulations in social service con-18 texts.

19 One case arose in Alaska and may be the most unusual. In Eric v. Secretary of the United States 20 HUD, 464 F. Supp. 44 (D. Alaska 1978), the court had before it an objection brought by certain In-21 dians to the adequacy of housing provided under the so-called Bartlett Act. That law generally pro-22 vided that housing should be constructed for Alaska natives. The court decided that the Act was 23 passed, in part, to implement the trust responsibility and did, in fact, establish a trust relationship 24 between the government and the Alaska natives with respect to housing. Having found that such a 25 "housing" trust existed, the court nevertheless recognized that the Bartlett Act itself established no 26 standards for the quality or nature of the housing to be provided. But, using the kind of theory typi-27 cally used in the Indian property contexts, the court imposed on the federal government a general 28 fiduciary obligation to provide decent, healthful housing. But Cf., Begay v. United States, 865 F.2d

1 230 (Fed. Cir. 1989) (Navajo-Hopi Settlement Act did not require United States to pay incidental 2 damages allegedly caused by relocation).

3 In the case of White v. Califano, 437 F. Supp. 543 (D. S. Dakota 1977) aff'd. 581 F.2d 697 (8th Cir.
4 1978) the court considered the obligation of the United States to pay for emergency in-patient men-5 tal health care for an indigent member of the Oglalla Sioux Tribe. Citing statements in the Indian 6 Health Care Act, 25 U.S.C. § 1601, referencing the unique relationship between the federal gov-7 ernment and Indians and calling for adequate health services for Indians, the court decided:

8 Congress has unambiguously declared that the federal government has a legal responsibility to pro-9 vide health care to Indians. This stems from the "unique relationship" between Indians and the fed-10 eral government, a relationship that is reflected in hundreds of cases and is further made obvious by 11 the fact that one bulging volume of the U.S. Code pertained only to Indians.

12 437 F. Supp. at 555. On this basis, the court held that those cases limiting the enforceable trust re-13 sponsibility to tribal property and money. It concluded, however, that the Indian Health Service had 14 to provide in-patient mental health care for a seriously mentally ill person, when the state would not 15 or could not do so. The court said that in health care, Congress had done much more than generally 16 announce the trust responsibility.

17 Therefore when we say [the court said] that the trust responsibility requires a certain course of ac-18 tion, we do not refer to a relationship that exists only in the abstract, but rather to a Congressionally 19 recognized duty to provide services for a particular category of human needs. The trust responsibil-20 ity, as recognized and defined by statute, is a ground upon which federal defendants' duties rest in 21 this case.

22 437 F. Supp. at 557.

23 Finally, the Califano court acknowledged that Congress only appropriated a certain limited amount 24 of money. Obviously, the Indian Health Service had to use its discretion in determining what per-25 sons to serve with limited funds. The court determined, however, that that discretion was con-26 strained by IHS regulations and it went on to read those regulations to require an allocation of funds 27 for those with the most pressing health needs--such as severe mental illness.

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 In McNabb v. Bowen, 829 F.2d 787 (9th Cir. 1987), an individual indigent Indian claimed that she 2 and her child were not being properly served by the Indian Health Service. She and her child could 3 not obtain health care from the local or state government and demanded that the federal government 4 take care of their health needs. In agreeing with her assertions, the Ninth Circuit did not rely quite 5 as explicitly on the trust doctrine as had the Eighth Circuit in White v. Califano. Rather, the court 6 concluded that the language of the Indian Health Care Act, "brought into sharper focus by the trust 7 doctrine," required that the Indian Health Service either assist an individual Indian in obtaining 8 other medical care (such as from a state) or provide the medical care itself. The court decided Con-9 gress intended that result. Thus, in a way, the McNabb case can be seen as a imposition by the court 10 of a "trust like" obligation based primarily on a specific statutory announcement of the trust by 11 Congress. Significantly, the court was unwilling to impose any particular kind of health care obliga-12 tion based on the broadly worded Snyder Act and turned, instead, to the more specifically Indian 13 Health Care Act.

14 The Ninth Circuit has also held that the federal government may not delegate its trust responsibili-15 ties to other governmental entities. See Assiniboine and Sioux Tribes v. Bd. Of Oil and Gas, 792 16 F.2d 782 (9th Cir. 1986).

17 4.3 Trust Responsibility and Treaty Rights.

18 Treaty rights are legally enforceable without reference to trust theory. See e.g. Washington v. Pas- 19 senger Fishing Vessel, 443 U.S. 658 (1979). However, the courts have also reminded the United 20 States that it has a trust duty to protect those rights.

21 Thus, the United States has been held subject to monetary damages if reserved Indian fisheries are 22 harmed by federal mismanagement or environmental degradation. See e.g., Whitefoot v. United 23 States, 293 F.2d 658 (Ct. Cl. 1961), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 818; Menominee Tribe v. United States, 24 391 U.S. 404, 413 (1968); Northern Paiute Tribe v. United States, 30 Ind. Cl. Comm. 210 (1973).
25 See also United States v. Winnebago Tribe of Nebraska, 542 F.2d 1002 (8th Cir. 1976).

26 The treaty right to take fish is a property right protected by the Fifth Amendment. As the district 27 court in Muckleshoot Indian Tribe v. Hall stated:

28

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 The United States has a fiduciary duty and "moral obligations of the highest responsibility and 2 trust" to protect the Indians' treaty rights. Seminole Nation v. United States, . . .
3 698 F. Supp. at 1510 (Corps of Engineers enjoined from permitting marina which would eliminate 4 judicially recognized fishing areas). The Court observed that "no court has permitted the actual tak-5 ing of fishing grounds without an act of Congress." Id. at 1512.

6 In upholding federal action providing for fisheries for Indians of the Hoopa Reservation in Califor-7 nia, the Ninth Circuit noted:

8 . . . We must conclude, as we did in Washington Charterboat, that the Tribes' federally recognized 9 fishing rights are accompanied by a corresponding duty on the part of the government to preserve 10 those rights.

11 Parravano v. Masten, 70 F.3d 539, 546-547 (9th Cir. 1995).

12 4.4 Executive Action and Trust Responsibility.

13 In modern times, the federal executive has recognized the unique relationship and trust responsibil-14 ity of the federal government to Indian tribes. In his special message on Indian Affairs, President 15 Richard Nixon disavowed the concept of termination of Indian tribes as follows:

16 Termination implies that the federal government has taken on a trusteeship responsibility for Indian 17 communities as an act of generosity toward a disadvantaged people and it can therefore discontinue 18 this responsibility on the unilateral basis whenever it sees fit. But the unique status of Indian tribes 19 does not rest on any premise such as this. The special relationship between Indians and the federal 20 government is a result instead of solemn obligations which have been entered into by the United 21 States' government.

23 . . . [T]he special relationship between the Indian tribes and the federal government which arises 24 from these agreements continues to carry immense moral and legal force.

25 "Special Message on Indian Affairs," July 8, 1970, by Richard M. Nixon, quoted in "Documents of 26 the United States Indian Policy," edited by Francis Paul Prucha, University of Nevada Press, p.256 27 (1975).

1 Federal agencies are subject to President Clinton's Executive Order regarding environmental justice, 2 which requires all federal agencies to identify and address disproportionately high and adverse hu-3 man health or environmental effects of programs and activities on minority and low-income popula-4 tions. See Exec. Order No. 12898, Federal Actions to Address Environmental Justice in Minority 5 Populations and Low-Income Populations, 59 Fed. Reg. 7629-7633 (Feb. 11, 1994). Although this 6 Executive Order applies to all minority and low-income populations, it contains special mention of 7 Native American programs due to the special relationship between the federal government and In-8 dian tribes. Id. § 6-606.

9 Federal agencies are also subject to President Clinton's Memoranda on the subject of government-10 to-government relations with tribal governments. Memoranda, Government-to-Government Rela-11 tions With Native American Tribal Governments, 59 Fed. Reg. 22951 (April 29, 1994). This 12 memoranda requires federal agencies to implement activities affecting tribal rights or trust re-13 sources in a "knowledgeable, sensitive manner respectful of tribal sovereignty." See id. Further, 14 federal agencies must "assess the impact" of their action on tribal trust resources and "assure that 15 tribal government rights and concerns are considered." See id. at § (c). Requirements of this memo-16 randum were further clarified in Executive Order 13084 entitled "Consultation and Coordination 17 with Indian Tribal Governments," 63 Fed. Reg. 27655 (May 14, 1998). Although the memorandum 18 of April 29, 1994, and Executive Order 13084 both are couched in terms of government-to-19 government relations and based on the recognition of tribal sovereignty, these documents also ref-20 erence the "unique legal relationship" and the "responsibilities that arise from the unique and legal 21 relationship" as a basis for their provisions. See e.g., Exec. Order 13084 § 2.

22 Numerous government agencies have attempted to comply with these directives. See Wood, Fulfill-23 ing The Executive's Trust Responsibility . . . , 25 Envtl. L. 733 (1995).

24 5. CONCLUSION - THE CASE OF THE RELUCTANT (INCOMPETENT?) GUARDIAN.

25 While the trust responsibility of the federal government is clear, implementation of that responsibil-26 ity proves difficult. No case better illustrates this than the recent litigation over the government's 27 management of the so-called IIM accounts (Individual Indian Money). Cobell v. Babbitt, Cause No.
28 96-1285, United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Through the IIM trust account writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 system the United States acts as trustee on accounts that hold money on behalf of individual Indian 2 beneficiaries. When the complaint in Cobell was originally filed, it was estimated that those ac-3 counts held nearly $500,000,000. By February of 1999 the estimate was that the accounts allegedly 4 held approximately $4,000,000,000.

5 The IIM accounts hold funds that originate from various sources related to Indian affairs. However, 6 the majority of the funds are derived from income earned from individual land allotted to members 7 of Indian tribes. This income includes income generated from grazing, farming, timber, mineral 8 rights, and land leases. On February 4, 1997, the district court certified the class consisting of all 9 present and former beneficiaries of these accounts. Cobell v. Babbitt, 30 F. Supp.2d 24 (D.D.C.
10 1998).

11 The case would seem to involve straight forward matters. Of course the United States must act as 12 fiduciary in handling the money of Indians under its administration. Indeed, Congress reconfirmed 13 the United States' duties with regard to these accounts in 1994 in the Indian Trust Fund Manage-14 ment Reform Act. 25 U.S.C. § 162a(d). This act codified several obligations of the Secretary of the 15 Interior with regard to the discharge of his trust duties and IIM accounts.

16 Despite the fact that the Department of the Interior's duties are clear, the course of litigation has un-17 covered a bungling incompetence that boggles the mind. So incompetent is the government's main-18 tenance of these records and so incompetent was the handling of the case, that on February 22, 19 1999, the court took the extraordinary steps of finding the Secretary of the Department of the Inte-
20 rior, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs in the Department 21 of the Interior, in civil contempt for failure to comply with discovery orders. Cobell v. Babbitt, ___ 22 F. Supp.3d ___, 1999 WL 101636 D.D.C. In testimony during the contempt trial, the former spe-23 cial trustee who had been unable to sort things out, testified that the IIM account record keeping 24 system was "the worst that I have seen in my entire life." Id. at 5. This testimony was from a man 25 who had served for five years supervising trust operations for the Comptroller of the Currency, as 26 Chief Executive of a large trust department for a commercial bank and as Chief Executive Officer 27 of Riggs Bank.

28

writ of error, coram vobis damnum absque injuria; petition for order to show cause and review.

1 The record in the case shows that Interior Department officials essentially did nothing of any value 2 to produce discovery documents, that Treasury officials destroyed records while under an order to 3 produce them, etc. The court said:

4 The way in which the defendants have handled this litigation up to the commencement of the con-5 tempt trial is nothing short of a travesty.

6 Id. at 6. The court found that defendants' "misbehavior is especially egregious," id. at 8, that defen-7 dants' arguments "must be looked upon with suspicion . . .," id. at 10, that defendants' interpretation 8 of the court's discovery order ". . . defies all logic." id., that the government displayed a ". . . reck-9 less approach to managing document production . . ." id. at 12, that the "facts of this case belie any 10 showing of good faith." id. at 16, and that several of the governments' attorneys ". . . have acted in-11 competently and with a shocking lack of candor to this Court." id. at 17.

12 The Justice Department also got its share of criticism. The court said:

13 Because of the Court's great respect for the Justice Department, the Court repeatedly accepted the 14 government's false statements as true, and brushed aside the plaintiffs' complaints. This two-week 15 contempt trial has certainly proved that the Court's trust in the Justice Department was misplaced.
16 The federal government did not just stub its toe. It abused the rights of the plaintiffs to obtain these 17 trust documents, and it engaged in a shocking pattern of deception of the Court. I have never seen 18 more egregious misconduct by the federal government.

19 The Snyder Act is the basic authorization act for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. It provides that:

20 "The Bureau, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall direct, supervise, and ex-21 pend such monies as Congress may from time to time appropriate, for the benefit, care, and assis-22 tance of the Indians throughout the United States,"

23 . . . including such matters as general support and civilization, administration of Indian property, 24 and general expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs. 25 U.S.C. § 13.
